Dr. Thomas J. Ward presented on strategic planning and peace studies as part of the WFWP Horizon Summit on Thursday March 16th. He encouraged all representatives of WFWP to take the two following courses created by the United States Institute of Peace, to get a deeper understanding of the workings of peace, conflict, and negotiation. They are free, take an estimated total of six hours to complete, and include a resume building certificate upon completion.

The theme for the 2017 prize focused on the global refugee crisis. This is the first reason I was so excited and curious who would be chosen as recipients. Seeing so many people having to flee from Syria breaks our hearts and sheds light on the global crises of people being displaced. So on February 3rd, when the Award Ceremony was held in South Korea, I was glued to my TV. I had read up about both Laureates: Dr Gina Strada who provides medical and surgical care to the victims of war and refugees around the world, and Dr. Sakena Yacoobi who presents an innovative solution for refugee resettlement through education.
